INTRODUCTION

These ten microfilm rolls reproduce the Simon Cameron Papers (1824-1892) located at the Historical Society of Dauphin County in Harrisburg. Totalling about 4,100 items or four cubic feet, this collection consists principally of incoming correspondence and business papers, but also includes thirteen letters or drafts of letters by Cameron himself. Nearly 3,800 items are in the period 1853-1865, with about a dozen dated before 1853 and most of the remainder in the years 1868-1876. There are single items for the years 1867, 1882, and 1892. Many of these papers relate to Cameron's political and governmental career, but others are concerned with business affairs. More important correspondents include James G. Blaine, Salmon P. Chase, John W. Geary, William F. Johnston, Samuel A. Purviance, William H. Seward, Eli Slifer, Alexander H. Stephens, Bayard Taylor, and David Wilmot. The papers contain one telegram from President Lincoln dated December 14, 1862.

The originals of these papers are located at the John Harris Mansion, at 219 South Front Street in Harrisburg, which was owned by Simon Cameron from 1863 until his death in 1889. Built in 1764-1766 by John Harris, Jr., founder of Harrisburg, this fine stone residence has been the home of the Historical Society of Dauphin County since 1941. Persons using the microfilm and intending either to reproduce or to quote from any of these papers should secure the permission of the society.

It should be noted that these papers are distinct from the Simon Cameron Papers which are located at the Library of Congress. The latter papers are described on page 4.

A recent biographer has noted that "Simon Cameron was one of the most controversial figures of his age; loudly acclaimed by his supporters and as ardently vilified by his enemies."¹ He was for many years Pennsylvania's most powerful political figure, and, over a period of three decades, held the offices of United States senator, secretary of war, and minister to Russia. However, he was born in humble circumstances in Lancaster County on March 8, 1799, the son of Charles and Martha (Pfoutz) Cameron. Because of reverses in his father's family, he was apprenticed in the printer's trade at an early age. By 1821 the young man was in Doylestown as editor of the Bucks County Messenger. After the demise of that newspaper, he went to Harrisburg and in 1822 became a partner in the management of the Pennsylvania Intelligencer. Two years later, Cameron purchased the Harrisburg Republican, and about 1825 he was awarded the position of State printer. Meanwhile, he had married Margaret Brua on October 16, 1822; five of their children were to grow to maturity.

Cameron's years as a journalist soon ended, but the period of his influence in the State was just beginning. He was commissioned as adjutant general of Pennsylvania in 1828. Meanwhile Cameron was becoming interested in various business enterprises. Thus he became a contractor for the construction of canals and entered the iron and insurance businesses. He built a network of railroads in Pennsylvania and united them into the Northern Central Railroad. In 1832, Cameron set up the Bank of Middletown with himself as cashier. Then, in 1838, he was appointed commissioner for the settling of certain Winnebago Indian claims; he exceeded instructions and issued certificates to third parties without requiring bond—an arrangement which aroused considerable controversy and earned him the derisive title, "The Great Winnebago Chief."

By the mid-1840's, Simon Cameron's attention was turning increasingly to politics. In 1845 a United States Senate seat was vacated by James Buchanan, who resigned to enter the cabinet of President Polk, and a coalition of Whig, Native American, and protectionist Democratic votes in the Pennsylvania legislature elected Cameron. Four years later, however, this fusionist technique did not prove effective; Cameron failed to win re-election and in March, 1849, he was back in private life.

Cameron attempted to return to the Senate with Know-Nothing support in 1855, but this effort failed. The following year he joined the newly formed Republican Party—a party to which he was to give his allegiance for the remainder of his life—and supported the Presidential campaign of John C. Frémont. In 1857 Cameron again was a candidate for the Senate, and this time (with Republican backing and the aid of three Democratic votes) he won his seat. He now became the leader of his party in Pennsylvania and was to remain so for the next twenty years.

Simon Cameron was a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1860 and won considerable support. After the promise came of a cabinet post in the event of Lincoln's nomination and election, however, Cameron swung Pennsylvania's votes to the Lincoln column. Following the election, the President-elect was hesitant about keeping this bargain which his managers had made for him. Nonetheless, on the day after the inauguration, Cameron was nominated as secretary of war, and he resigned his Senate seat.

The choice as secretary of war proved an unsatisfactory one. Cameron was accused of favoritism in the dispensing of offices and the awarding of army contracts, and his department was charged with corruption. Differences developed between him and Lincoln, to whom Cameron's presence in the Cabinet was becoming embarrassing. In January, 1862, the President nominated Cameron as minister to Russia, and the Pennsylvanian tendered his resignation as secretary. Simon Cameron proceeded to Russia and took up his diplomatic duties there, but he did not remain in that country long. He was granted a furlough in September, returned to the United States, and resigned on February 23, 1863. That same year he tried unsuccessfully to return to the Senate. Early in 1867 he tried again and was elected, and that March he was once again seated as a United States senator from Pennsylvania.

During the next ten years, Cameron consolidated his power. His smoothly run party machine dominated politics in the Commonwealth. In 1871 he became chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, succeeding Charles Sumner. Two years later he was re-elected to his seat practically without a contest. Cameron controlled his State's patronage in the Grant administration, and in 1876 he had the satisfaction of seeing his son, J. Donald Cameron (1833-1918) appointed secretary of war.

President Rutherford B. Hayes, inaugurated in 1877, refused to continue the younger Cameron in his War Department post. Simon Cameron thereupon resigned as United States senator, effective March 12, 1877, and eight days later the Pennsylvania legislature elected his son to succeed him. The mantle of State party control also passed from father to son, and the 78-year-old Cameron thus closed his career as a dominating figure on the political scene. However, the tightly controlled Republican organization which he had built up remained a power in the State for more than forty years thereafter—under the leadership of his son and Matthew S. Quay during the early period, and later under that of Boies Penrose.

During the remainder of his life Simon Cameron lived in retirement, traveling extensively but also spending considerable time on the 1,200-acre estate at Donegal, Lancaster County, which he had purchased in 1872. His wife had died on June 19, 1874, but Simon Cameron himself lived into his ninety-first year. He passed away at his beloved Donegal home on June 26, 1889. The body was taken to his Front Street residence in Harrisburg for the last rites, and he was buried in the family plot in that city.

Of Simon Cameron, A. Howard Meneely wrote in the Dictionary of American Biography:

In his senatorial career there was little that was statesman-like or brilliant. He had no aptitude for Websterian oratory or flights of verbal fancy. He said little in public that was vital, but did much in private that was practical, far-seeing, and astute. His business in the Senate, as elsewhere, was politics, and he governed his conduct accordingly.²

The leading collection of Cameron papers other than that reproduced on this microfilm is the Simon Cameron Papers (1738-1889) at the Library of Congress. The bulk of the material in those papers dates from the period 1860-1880. Amounting to approximately 7,600 items, the collection includes correspondence, reports, speeches, maps, financial records, newspapers, and news clippings relating to Cameron's financial affairs, his political career, and his retirement years. Among the most important correspondents are Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, Charles A. Dana, and his son J. Donald Cameron. The Simon Cameron Papers at the Library of Congress are available on microfilm (22 rolls), which may be purchased from that institution.

Other manuscript collections at the Library of Congress containing Simon Cameron material are the papers of Jeremiah Black, William E. Chandler, John Covode, Hamilton Fish, John W. Forney, Andrew Johnson, Edward McPherson, John G. Nicolay, Thaddeus Stevens, Benjamin F. Wade, and Elihu Washburne, as well as the Papers of James Buchanan and Harriet Lane Johnston (one collection), Simon Cameron Letters to Mrs. S. C. Burnside, Robert Todd Lincoln Collection, and Matthew Quay Letters.

Among the collections with Cameron material at other repositories are the William Bigler Papers, James Buchanan Papers, Samuel Calvin Correspondence, Lewis S. Coryell Correspondence, Henry C. Carey Papers, Salmon P. Chase Papers, Simon Gratz Autograph Collection, A. Boyd Hamilton Correspondence, and Wayne MacVeagh

Papers, all at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania (Philadelphia); the Slifer-Dill Manuscripts at the Dickinson College Library (Carlisle, Pennsylvania); the Papers of John Covode at the Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania (Pittsburgh); the Cassius M. Clay Manuscripts at Lincoln Memorial University (Harrogate, Tennessee); and the Hendrick B. Wright Papers at the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society (Wilkes-Barre). A small Simon Cameron Collection (1816, 1835-1875), consisting of 16 items, mainly letters from Cameron, is at the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission (Harrisburg).

A biography of Cameron which, despite its title, covers his entire career is Erwin Stanley Bradley's Simon Cameron, Lincoln's Secretary of War: A Political Biography (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1966). It includes a bibliography of other books as well as articles, pamphlets, and unpublished academic theses relating to Cameron. An earlier study which concentrates on the pre-Civil War period is Lee F. Crippen's Simon Cameron: Ante-Bellum Years (Oxford, Ohio: The Mississippi Valley Press, 1942).

The original microfilm was made in 1957-1958 under the supervision of Mrs. Autumn L. Leonard, Associate Historian of the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission, by the former Bureau of Document Recording of the State Department of Property and Supplies. Later, it was edited and revised to meet present-day standards.

On the pages that follow, the Simon Cameron Papers at the Historical Society of Dauphin County are listed in the order in which they appear on the microfilm. The items are arranged in one chronological series, except for occasional enclosures, which immediately follow the covering letters, and for undated letters and other papers, which appear at the end of the last roll. Unless otherwise specified, entries refer to letters; these are identified by name of recipient, name of writer, place of writing (when known), and date. Where no recipient is indicated, the letter is addressed to Simon Cameron. The roll number appears immediately above the first entry for each new roll and is repeated at the top of succeeding pages.

The editor would like to thank the members of the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission and its Executive Director, Dr. S. K. Stevens, for making this publication possible. He also wishes to thank Dr. Donald H. Kent, Director of the Bureau of Archives and History, and Mr. William A. Hunter, Chief of the Division of History, who supervised publication; and Mr. Harold L. Myers, Associate Historian, who checked the manuscript and prepared it for the press.
